Excellent!Von Detra FitchChief Petty Officer Brian Skelley, US navy bomb expert, had been on his last assignment in a remote training area of the Scottish Highlands. Brian had planted several different types of inert bombs for his men to locate and identify. However, they found one planted by someone else...and it was live!Brian woke up to find himself in the year 1301. Kilbeinn Castle, which had been only ruins before, had somehow become tall, sturdy, and full of life. The Clan Mackenzie dwelled in the keep. Callum and Malcolm had chanced upon Brian and took him to the castle for treatment by Caira. Caira Mackenzie was Laird of the clan. Her father and husband were dead. All the able-bodied men had left to join the notorious William Wallace when Caira's father had signed a treaty of neutrality with King Edward. Thus all the care and protection of the clan fell on her slim shoulders. Caira had no way of knowing if Brian was part of the foul Englishmen in the fort nearby or not. Wisely, she kept wary and sent him to the fort, by way of Callum and Malcolm, when he was well. Upon finding out Brian was NOT with those from the fort, and seeing him stand up to the cruel English, the two escorted Brian back to the keep. Caira allowed Brian time to "experiment". She never understood what the black powder was that Brian was experimenting with or what he meant to do with the foul smelling powder. Brian wanted only to return to the year 2004. He was positive that if he made the powder just right the blast would send him back home. However, he could not ignore the plight of Caira and the clan. In the process of helping them, he and Caira began falling in love. Now he must decide whether to stay in 1301 with Caira or return to his own time. Ah, this story is pure bliss! The characters are so easy to care for and the ending was an act of genius! Brava, Virginia Farmer! I enjoyed every minute of this time travel romance and highly recommend it to all. Reviewed by Detra Fitch of Huntress Reviews.

KurzbeschreibungAn explosion blasts bomb disposal specialist Brian Skelley back to fourteenth-century Scotland and into the lives of Caira MacKenzie and her clan. With a career-making advancement waiting for him back in twenty-first century America, Brian must do whatever he can to return home. Since it was a blast that sent him back in time, he figures it would take another to return. Hes spent his entire military career making sure he didnt get blown up, and now he had to try to do it on purpose?Caira doesnt like having a stranger among her clan, let alone one claiming to be from the future. It doesnt matter that he can weave a story that holds the entire clan spellbound, or that one look from him weakens her bones. There are secrets that could see the end of the MacKenzie clan. Though her head tells her to use caution, her heart softens toward the dafty man. Brian focuses solely on returning to his time. Hes determined to remain uninvolved in the MacKenzie clans problems. That is until a series of incidents threaten Caira and her people. His protective instincts take over, and he finds himself right in the middle of it all. All it takes is one sizzling kiss to show both Caira and Brian that love can be a blast!
