Romantic SuspenseVon Helen HancoxSusan Kearney's latest book has moved away from the paranormal romance genre in which she has recently been writing to a more apparently down-to-earth set of characters. We are introduced to three sisters, Kaylin, Becca and Lia Danner, who have to come to terms with the death of their scientist/chemist father at the beginning of the book. Everyone thinks the father's death is an accident but it soon becomes apparent that there may be something more sinister going on and that people may be trying to find his formula for biodiesel. Sawyer Scott was Dr Danner's research partner and he works with Kaylin to try to investigate who may have caused the accident that killed Dr Danner. As Kaylin and Sawyer work closely together and as they learn about each other their attraction grows; however, with kidnapping and other danger to the family, is there any chance for a future for them, especially as Kaylin doesn't want to marry someone like her father and instead wants to go to New York to dance. This story was OK with some moments of suspense and a varied cast of characters. However it was also rather unbelievable at many times with credulity stretched to breaking point as we try to go along with the plot. Some aspects of characterisation were rather sparse, such as Becca's boyfriend Shadee, and I was never entirely sure who he was or exactly what he did within the story, and the arrival of the girls' grandmother into the story was rather skimmed over. This was a reasonable read but the unlikelihood of the plot in places rather spoilt it for me and although hero and heroine were engaging people I never entirely entered the world of the story to fully appreciate them.
